

Put the vault in the spotlight

The ask

The November campaign already has its two slots. Give treasury one more – a slot that only surfaces when a customer's needs already point at the vault.

3rd

a third promotional priority slot for Diamond Vault Account, after the two approved slots

14

treasury-tier relationships on the shortlist – most of the book's savings balances sit with them

1 line

the entire desk-card change; no new creative, no new page

Why it wins

- ◆ Balance-weighted impact: one treasury-tier opening moves more deposit volume than a month of entry-tier openings.
- ◆ The treasury desk already fields campaign-driven questions; a slot turns the redirect into a recommendation.
- ◆ Routing doesn't change: Diamond Vault conversations still land with Treasury Products – the slot changes ordering, not process.
- ◆ Q4 is treasury season – year-end cash consolidation is when these customers are already moving money.

The math (our model)

- ◆ $140M projected incremental deposit inflow across the window at a one-in-five conversion of the shortlist.
- ◆ Nine of the fourteen shortlist relationships already clear the standard opening flow without exceptions.
- ◆ Model, shortlist, and sensitivity runs live in the treasury workbook; Marcus Bell has the file.

What we need on the 27th

- ◆ A yes adds one line to the desk card behind the two approved slots – treasury takes the routing from there, same as today.
- ◆ Creative, page copy, and the campaign window stay exactly as the working group settled them; the slot rides the existing material.
- ◆ If November is the wrong cycle, we'd rather hear it at the planning review and bring this back for Q1 with the year-end numbers behind it.
